Role of L&D and HR in DEI Learning
DEI continues to be a top priority for organizations globally. L&D and HR Professionals play a weighty role in DEI strategy. Our most recent Workplace Learning Report shows 55% of L&D teams own or share responsibility for the DEI strategy of their organizations. But these programs are not one-size-fits-all.

Why LinkedIn Learning for DEI
Through one of the most expansive online DEI learning libraries (475+ courses across 7 languages), LinkedIn Learning gives organizations and people the ability to curate their own DEI learning journeys based on their unique goals. We have invested significantly in DEI over several years (introducing 130+ new courses in the last year alone). This is because learning DEI skills is a clear need to drive DEI objectives forward and create more equitable workplaces (RedThread DEIB Skills Report 1, 2). LinkedIn learning did not stop at developing courses.

New Curated DEI Learning Paths
To drive organizations and learners to engage actively in their DEI learning journeys, LinkedIn Learning is releasing 6 new learning paths matched to common DEI learning and organizational objectives.

These learning paths make it easy to recommend learning to employees or to customize to fit your specific organizational learning needs, like creating an inclusive culture, inclusive leadership training, and hiring diverse talent.

Employees can learn from top thought leaders and experts through these learning paths, including Pat Wadors (CPO at Procore), Kenji Yoshino (NYU Professor), Kwame Christian (Director of the American Negotiation Institute), and Amy Edmonson (Harvard Professor).
